Faculty of Asian Languages and Cultures of Guangdong University of Foreign Studies (GDUFS) was formerly known as the "Third Department" of Guangzhou University of Foreign Studies in 1970. It was renamed the Department of Oriental Languages in 1983. In 1997, Faculty of Asian Languages and Cultures was established on the basis of the Department of Oriental Languages. In 2018, the school adjusted its disciplines and majors and established a new Faculty of Asian Languages and Cultures. The faculty currently offers 7 undergraduate majors, namely Indonesian, Vietnamese, Thai, Malay, Lao, Cambodian, and Burmese. In 2023, the Filipino major was approved to be established. The college currently has master's and doctoral programs in secondary disciplines of Asian and African languages and literature, and also recruits postdoctoral fellows in foreign languages and literature. It has the Ministry of Education's National and Regional Research Center—Indochina Research Center, and four national-level first-class undergraduate major construction sites— Thai, Vietnamese, Indonesian, Malay, and three provincial-level first-class undergraduate major construction sites - Lao, Cambodian, and Burmese. The college adopts the "3.5+0.5" education model, which means that students study abroad in the target country for half a year. The college actively promotes the international talent training strategy. As of the end of 2022, it has established cooperative relationships with dozens of institutions of higher learning in Indonesia, Vietnam, Thailand, Malaysia, Laos, Cambodia, Myanmar and other countries, and has carried out cooperation projects such as scientific research cooperation, teacher exchange, and student exchange, etc.

The School of Journalism and Communication at GDUFS was founded in 2005 and emerged out of the International Journalism program offered to students majoring in English. Since the School's establishment, teaching journalism in English has been a major concept. Our goal is to develop into an influential base for teaching and research in international communication throughout the country, particularly in South China. We now offer two national first-class majors (Journalism, Broadcasting and Hosting) and one provincial characteristic major (Internet and New Media) for undergraduate education, and 2 master's programs in Journalism and Communication. We also have a doctoral program "International Communication of Chinese Culture" under the doctoral program of Foreign Language and Literature. We not only have excelled at academic research, but also have provided services to governments and various other organizations.

Teachers in our school are undertaking over 20 national scientific research projects, over 30 provincial and ministerial research programs, and dozens of programs sponsored by governments, enterprises and institutions. We have published more than 50 monographs and translated books, 10 textbooks and hundreds of high quality papers. The school's staff includes 13 professors and 16 associate professors, 38 teachers with doctoral degrees. Three-quarters of the teaching staff possess overseas study experience, and 40% can conduct all-English instruction. We have established academic exchange and cooperation programs for both undergraduates and postgraduates with over 10 universities in the UK, USA, Australia, Taiwan and Hong Kong.

SOB of GDUFs enjoys a long history. Traced back to 1982, it was an outgrowth of the Department of Business Management of the former Guangzhou Institute of Foreign Trade. In May, 2001, the School of Management of GDUFs was established. In 2014, it was merged with the Graduate School of Business to form SOB. Committed to a vision of growing into a top-tier internationalized business school with distinctive features and excellent quality, SOB aims to cultivate international business talents of high quality.

SOB offers a First-level Doctoral Program of Applied Economics co-established with Economics and Management Division, 2 First-level Master's Degree Programs of Business Administration and Management Science and Engineering, 3 Second-level Master's Degree Programs of Business Management, Technological Economics and Management, and Tourism Management, and 2 Professional Master's Degree Programs in Master of Business Administration and Master of Applied Psychology. SOB provides 5 undergraduate programs of Business Administration, Marketing, Human Resources Management, Logistic Management and E-commerce, and has established Business Administration (International Innovation Class) and Business Administration (International Business Innovation Class).

In 2017, SOB was accredited and granted a membership of AACSB, as well as initiated and qualified CAMEA accreditation. The year 2020 also witnessed that the school was the third in mainland China and the 90th in the world to be accredited by EPAS. The School obtained AMBA re-accreditation and BGA accreditation in May, 2021, becoming the 8th AMBA & BGA joint accredited school in China. Business Administration rated in the top 21% in China according to the 2021 Soft Science Ranking of Chinese Universities Subject.
